

SECURE CONDOM

ABSTRACT

a condom of special design that will prevent said condom from coming off accidentally during sexual intercourse, said condom accomplishing this by having an area from the open end of said condom extending to within approximately two inches from the closed end of said condom of smaller circumference than the male members shaft that it will fit, said area will be small enough in circumference that it will take a small amount of effort to remove said condom over the head of said male member, said condom will require an installation ring of durable material such as hard plastic or other similar material, said installation ring will have a hole thru the center of large enough circumference that the head of the male member that said installation ring fits will enter easily, said ring will have a groove on the outside circumference large enough to hold said area of small circumference rolled up and stretched upon to said installation ring, said groove will have one side of larger circumference than the other side of said groove to prevent said area of smaller circumference from being rolled off said installation ring in the wrong direction, said condom will have an enlarged area extending from the closed end of said condom for a distance of approximately two inches, such enlarged area being of larger circumference than the head of the male member said condom will fit which will give the user the sensation of not having a condom installed, said condoms will come rolled up onto said installation ring with said enlarged area extending thru said installation ring, said condoms will be packaged in water soluable lubricant, said lubricant will also enhance the natural sensation of not having a condom installed, said lubricant can be used on said secure condoms since there is no worry of said secure condoms coming off accidentally